A man while visiting a country house became much interested in his friend's experiments in fruit culture. One day the visitor was making the rounds of the place, accompanied by the host's little daughter, who acted as guide.

"This tree seems to be loaded with apples," observed the visitor, indicating a particularly fine specimen.

"Yes," assented the little girl; "father says this is a good year for apples."

"I am glad to hear that. Are all your trees as full of apples as this one?"

"Oh, no," explained the child; "only the apple trees."—Exchange.
